Domestic Abuse and Equality before the Law

Thu 11th May 6.15pm-8.30pm

ABOUT

Marital relationships are one of the most sensitive areas of domestic relationships. They are particularly challenging when there are tensions between the partners, or the relationship breaks down. Often what is a “cultural custom” has come to be seen and accepted as a “religious tradition”. This causes great difficulties in religious communities living in the West, including Britain.

Civic law grants women complete equality with men. Domestic abuse and divorce in law courts are not always approached with the same perspective as religious courts.

How do we navigate our way in this complicated maze of religious laws, civic laws, customs and traditions?

This seminar gives everybody the opportunity to hear religious and legal professionals discuss these issues. It also gives us the opportunity to hear how other religious communities facing similar difficulties are navigating these areas and what lessons can be shared.

Please join us for an exciting, informative and challenging evening, and, express your opinion.
